3. Results and Discussion

Blaise provides the view that the institutional approach does not only emphasize instrumental characteristics, nor does it focus analysis and action primarily on the structural, functional and behavioral elements that exist within the organizational system. [5]. In synnional analysis, we pay attention to the objectives and values that extend beyond the immediate task at hand [with the spread of norms] affecting participants and clients beyond functional and productive specializations. [Institutional values] and the specific patterns of relationships and actions that govern the performance of functions within the institution become normative beyond the boundaries of the institution itself [and] a stable point of reference both within the organization and for the environment.

So, value is one of the important dimensions of an institution with the assumption that the Institution building is different from institution change. Milton J. Esman, who conceptualized the model, and thought that institutions Building is a general social process and recognizes a set of elements and actions. The analysis is developed in three analytical categories: institutional, transaction and linkage variables. In institutional building context in communication forums intelligence area or often abbreviated as KOMINDA in prevention potency conflict in the Province Central Java analyzed through the concept of institutional building by Esman In explain model, Esman has define and describe five variables main institution building: leadership, doctrine, resources, programs and internal structure, resulting in results findings research on communication
